WITH THE JAPANESE ARMY
NORTH OF WOOSUNG, Feb. 11—Hello everybody!

I don't know what you shout when you want to cheer the Chinese soldiers for putting up a swell fight, but whatever the expression I am here to broadcast my compliments and admiration for that stubborn courageous resistance those babies are making against terrific odds in numbers and materials in their defense of the Woosung area.

Yesterday I paid my respects to the Japanese fliers for their nifty job they have been doing on their low-flying bombing expeditions in dirty thick weather. Now here is a bouquet for the Chinese defenders, who have been on the receiving end of those same bombs for 48 hours and are still sticking to what ruins remain of their posts in the face of heavy and repeated attacks from land and sea.

I have been down here for the last 40 hours, and it's getting hotter hourly. With a motor speedboat of Detroit make and two Chinese boys I pushed off from alongside the United States destroyer Barker and dropped down-stream.

The up and down parade of Japanese destroyers was still in progress with its terrible pounding and blasting away at the homes and entrenchments of Woosung Village. A rain was falling, and a light mist merged with the darker smoke from the burning buildings.

Big bombing seaplanes with enormous projectiles that looked like aerial torpedoes suspended between their pontoons and wheeled continually at an altitude of approximately three or four hundred feet.

Repeatedly they dove down at sharp angles on the ruins of Woosung Village, released explosives, and sped away in the hail of machine-gun bullets from the Chinese defenses.

Not only were the defenders sticking it out, but they were actually resisting, because every low approach of the airplanes was met with a riveting fusillade of machine-gun fire.

Those aerial torpedoes—they looked like they weighed anywhere from 500 to 1,000 pounds—produced terrific detonations and sudden volcanic eruptions of building material, mud and debris, but with my field glasses focused on the scene from a distance of 200 yards I was unable to see a single human being amid the ruins.

Up the river from the direction of the Yanktze steamed a large destroyer of the flotilla leader type. She loomed dark gray against the yellow waters of the Whangpoo, and her bridge and conning tower were banded and muffled with white splinter-proof mats looking like hundreds of mattresses and pillow being given an airing by a thrifty housewife.

And say, it was mighty strange to see the navy using sandbags on board ship, but that's what they were—hundreds of sandbags protecting the destroyer's crew on all exposed parts of the deck and super-structure.

I have no doubt that destroyer had made several trips up and down past Woosung village and had had a very good if not painful idea of the intensity of that machine-gun fire from shore.

I watched the long grey muzzles of her four six-inch guns swing slowly into broadside positions as they brought to bear on the shore line. The gun crews of blue-uniformed sailors huddled close to the pieces behind armor-plate shields.

Then the guns spoke—salvos of hot metal fired point-blank at 50 yards range right smack bang into the stone water wall at the water's edge. I could see the heavy projectiles hit and fragments of rock and splinters of steel flying in all directions. The APOLOGIZES TO U. S.

Shanghai, Feb. 11.—A formal apology for the bombing of a Wingdon cotton mill by Japanese airplanes, causing the death of six Chinese and endangering the lives of 100 U. S. Marines, was delivered to the U. S. Consul General Edward R. Cunningham by the Japanese Consul General today.

The mill, located in the American International Settlement along Soochow Creek, was badly damaged. The incident would have been worse but for the fact that an incendiary bomb dropped by a low-flying Japanese plane failed to ignite.

PLAN GENERAL DEFENSE

Tokyo, Feb. 11.—The expected general Japanese defense in the Shanghai area will begin February 15th, Shanghai dispatches said today. The new reinforcements recently dispatched are to be landed along the Woosung front during the next two days, according to reports.

Mayor Moore Too Busy To See "Geo. Washington"

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 11.—You've often heard people sigh: "I wonder what General Washington would do if he were to come back to Philadelphia today?"

Well, General Washington came back to City Hall yesterday, and Mayor Moore hung out the old "In Conference" sign on him, and City Hall generally gave the distinguished visitor the old raze, which is just a word for practically no attention whatever.

General Washington and a few of his boys, including the Marquis de Lafayette, Baron von Steuben, Mad Anthony Wayne, General Gates and Washington's aide, Major Smith, stopped in at City Hall during their tour of Philadelphia and Valley Forge, in which they drummed up trade for the Washington Birthday celebration to be held in Convention Hall.

All done up in powdered wigs, three-cornered hats, hip boots, capes and what not, General Washington (Ernest Gamble), Lafayette (Captain Louis V. Emberger), General Gates (Captain Earl du Bost), Baron von Steuben (Captain James A. B. Francis), General Wayne (Walter Eldridge), and Major Smith (Captain Albert E. Hermann), walked into the Mayor's reception room, and announced themselves as prepared to have audience with Mayor Moore to his secretary, Harry Baxter.

A few minutes later, Baxter scuttled out of the Mayor's sanctum.

"I'm sorry, gentlemen," he said in a low tone, "but the Mayor is in conference. He is too busy to see you."

AMERICA'S INTEREST IN MANCHURIA

By David Spector

Japan has always been the only power to dispute American supremacy in the Pacific Ocean and in the Far East. Since Japan desires Manchuria and since Japan needs the country, will she put an end to the "open-door policy" in Manchuria? If so, the United States will be one of the losers, for we have profited by this policy. However, the uppermost thought is, will Japan's conquest of Manchuria make her so aggressive that Japanese Militarism forced on by the country's need of more land and resources, covet the possessions of territory close to and essential to Japan? For example, the Philippine Islands—whose population is largely Japanese.

Trips to Nearby Washington Landmarks

By Edward W. Hoeker

Because of the bicentennial of George Washington, keen interest has been aroused in all manner of Washington landmarks. Southeastern Pennsylvania is fortunate in possessing so many of these landmarks, associated with the career of Washington in war and peace. Herewith is one of a series of twenty articles describing nearby places which are linked with the story of the Father of his country.

IV.—Headquarters in Newtown

Among Newtown's many historic landmarks is a house associated with George Washington by reason of the fact that it, or possibly its predecessor on the same site, was his headquarters immediately following the glorious victory which the Americans achieved over the Hessians in Trenton the day after Christmas, 1776.

On leaving the Keith house, eight miles north of Newtown, on Christmas Day, Washington sent his personal effects, in charge of a secretary, to Newtown, then the county seat of Bucks County. The secretary made arrangements for Washington's occupancy of a house in Newtown belonging to the estate of John Harris.

Following the triumph in Trenton the Americans recrossed the Delaware and on December 27 they were in Newtown, bringing with them 1,000 Hessian soldiers who had surrendered, together with six brass field pieces, eight stands of colors and numerous small arms that had been taken. Twenty-three Hessian officers were quartered in the inns of Newtown, one of these being the Brick Tavern, still standing. The Hessian privates were placed in the prison, the Presbyterian Church, still standing, and other buildings.

From the Harris house Washington, on December 27, forwarded a report of the engagement at Trenton to the president of Congress. He had four of the highest Hessian officers to dine with him at his headquarters. On the 30th the captive officers signed a parole and were taken to Philadelphia, Lancaster or Baltimore, while the Hessian troops, in charge of a guard, were sent to Lancaster.

Washington left Newtown December 30, returning to Trenton with his army, preparatory to the movements which culminated in the American victory at the battle of Princeton.

Military activities were now ended for the time being on Pennsylvania soil, though in midsummer of 1777 the army was once more in Bucks County, entering upon the momentous campaigns of 1777-78.

There is some question as to whether the building in Newtown designated as the Harris house is the original structure. It is constructed of stone and attractively situated on the left of state highway route 532 as the road enters the western part of Newtown from the south. Unquestionably the house is very old, and most historians say it is the house in which Washington lived. However, J. Pemberton Hutchinson, in a paper read before the Bucks County Historical Society in 1896, asserted that another house formerly stood on this site and that he remembered seeing it torn down.

There is a tradition that on leaving Newtown Washington presented the Harris family with a silver tankard, which descendants many years later had converted into spoons.

DEMANDS FED'L INTERVENTION

Washington, D. C., Feb. 11.—The dramatic demand of Senator Borah, Republican of Idaho, for Federal intervention to prevent starvation among nation's unemployed, today threw some doubt over the outcome of the battle for a $750,000,000 direct relief bill. Borah overruled Senator Fess, Republican national chairman, who led the opposition to the bill. Fess declared the Federal aid was not necessary, that direct relief would impose the dole on America, and that unemployment relief could be handled by local communities.

HOLD SUSPECTS

Philadelphia, Feb. 11.—While plans went forward for the burial of Dorothy Lutz, a 38-year-old neighbor suspect was held in connection with her slaying. Confronted with the blood-stained garments of the battered little girl he sobbed in terror. Beyond the report of neighbors, police, however, had no definite clues linking him with attacking and strangling of the 8-year-old child. Neighbors asserted they had seen him in front of the untenanted dwelling where the mutilated body was found five days after she disappeared. He gave his name as Michael Montycha. Assistant Superintendent of Police Joseph LeStrange declared he regarded his arrest as highly important. Meanwhile, last rites for the dead child are set for 2 p. m. Gilbert Eadie, 40, colored, who is said to answer the description of a suspect sought in connection with the murder, was taken into custody early today. He was reported to have a mole under his right eye and one button missing from his overcoat. A button was found beneath the child's body which police said evidently had been torn off in a struggle.

KERSHAW FACES WOMAN HE SHOT HERE ON JAN. 14

Given Preliminary Hearing and Held for Grand Jury

IS RETURNED TO JAIL

Mrs. Ella McNichol Tells of Shooting and Acknowledges
Statement Given Police

The two principals who enacted the tragedy which occurred at the home of Mrs. Ella McNichol, 331 Monroe street, on the evening of January 14th, faced each other in Municipal Court here yesterday afternoon.

Samuel Kershaw, 32, New Buckley street, charged with shooting Mrs. McNichol, was brought back from the county jail at Doylestown for a formal hearing upon the charge. The woman in the case appeared and gave testimony against her alleged suitor. Kershaw was held without bail for the grand jury on the charges of assault and battery, aggravated assault and battery with intent to kill and possession of a revolver without a permit. Judge Edward Lynn heard the case.

Mrs. McNichol, 40, attractive and with a pleasing personality, was somberly garbed. She wore a black dress with black coat trimmed with fur collar and cuffs. Her hat was in harmony with her costume.

Mrs. McNichol appeared in a very weakened condition and at one time bordered close onto a fainting spell. She supported herself by leaning against the walls of the room. She taxied to police headquarters and was accompanied either by friend or counsel.

Kershaw was brought back from the county jail in the police car by Officer Ferry who was the officer who arrested him at his home following the shooting of the woman, as well as an attempt to take his own life by firing a bullet into his head shortly after the affair at the McNichol home.

Kershaw appeared in good spirits and there was a total lack of vindictiveness between the two.

Mrs. McNichol, Chief Jones and Officer Ferry were the only witnesses to give testimony. Chief Jones testified receiving the call on the night of the shooting and gave an account as to his investigation of the case which followed. Ferry told of arresting Kershaw at his home on New Buckley street and of the statement which he made at that time and in which he acknowledged the shooting.

Mrs. McNichol at first was prone to acknowledge the signed statement given to the police but later admitted the authenticity of the statement.

She told Judge Lynn that she came down the front stairway of her home on the night of the shooting, saw Kershaw with a gun in his hand. She said he fired at her and that she felt a pain in her breast and that Kershaw fired two more shots.

At the conclusion of the hearing Mrs. McNichol left police headquarters unaccompanied and returned to her home. Kershaw spent the night in police headquarters and this morning was taken back to the county jail. Kershaw was visited by his wife and family and it is intimated that every effort will be made to aid him at his trial, which it is believed will be held for the February term of criminal court.

On the evening of January 14th Kershaw went to the McNichol home where he became involved in an argument with the woman over a loan of $20 which was followed by the shooting. In statements made following the arrest of Kershaw and the regaining of consciousness by the woman in Dr. Wagner's hospital, it was intimated that the pair had been friendly for quite some time.

A TIME FOR SELFISHNESS

Buying at home by the government is being stimulated by President Hoover, who, among other things, is advocating legislative authority for the exercise of a wider discretion by department heads in giving preference to American products in the purchase of government supplies and equipment.

Under existing practice government contracts must be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder, except that the war and navy departments have been enabled during the current fiscal year to favor home producers where it does not incur unreasonable expense. President Hoover wants congress to give all departments the same latitude as a means of stimulating American production and manufacture.

As long as American factories are closed and American workers idle it is to the selfish interest of all Americans to buy at home. They benefit from buying American goods and from their own communities where possible. Money spent away from home travels a long way before it comes back, and at the best, only a fraction of it returns.

There is opportunity for a nice balancing of the interest of the taxpayer in getting the best available bargains and his interest in turning the wheels of commerce to getting in the place of his residence, to the end that buying power may be increased, real values restored and taxables raised in status as municipal assets. It is a nearsighted policy which saves a few pennies on a low foreign bid when the contract takes thousands, even millions, out of the community or country.

KEEPING FAITH

When a man's heart is young, his thoughts find place for dreams in which ambition and good intention are busy with the future before it is come. Such dreams may outstretch probability and promise more than the years can fulfill, but it is a poor sort of cynicism that would therefore deny their usefulness. They keep the face of youth to the front and its eyes upward. They are impatient of experience and full of assurance that what is good and desirable may be won by work and will. They are not dismayed by dangers nor daunted by difficulties.

The hardest task of man is to keep faith with the dreams of his youth. Then he had high hopes for himself and ideals which he had not learned to question. Hope was his rainbow, with the gold of success, achievement and character at its end. But life is insistent with necessities and tempting with compromises, and it is easy to lose the way which once seemed so clear. It is easy to forget that the future was once better than the present and things unseen of more worth than realities. It is easy to forget the dream in the hard wakefulness of the day's work. It is easy to lose it, indeed, so that life ends in regret for a vanished land of promise.

"Keep Faith" is an ancient watchword, but it is one not yet outworn. Keep faith with the dreams of youth, which were made of hope and courage and high intention for all experience cannot much better their guidance.

SYNOPSIS

The Mexican peons, grown tired of Paco Morales' oppression, await the word from "El Coyote," their masked protector, to overthrow him. Morales has enlisted the aid of the U. S. Cavalry to capture the notorious bandit. Ted Radcliffe, a young American, learns that Morales was responsible for his late father's ruin. Bob Harkness, Ted's friend, urges him not to make an enemy of Morales, as he has other plans. Ted is enamored of Morales' beautiful niece, Adela. At a fiesta, Adela, sensing the hatred of Jito, Morales' ward, for Ted, exacts a promise from Ted never to fight with him. Morales informs Bob that his men will join in the search for "El Coyote" and that Jito has dedicated himself to kill the bandit. Adela tells Ted he must not let his lack of wealth keep him from love. Bob receives a note and leaves the mystery-making. Shortly after, news is received that Jito's vaqueros are raiding the village. Adela goes to the village with Ted and Morales, and lashes a vaquero insulting a girl. She calls "El Coyote's" vengeance upon Jito. Just as Jito orders the flogging of a poor farmer, "El Coyote" appears. His men disarm the vaqueros and inform Morales his rule is over. Back at the hacienda, Jito says he will prevent Adela from riding with Ted the next day. A messenger arrives with the news that one of Jito's men has been killed by Anton, an Indian, whom they have captured.

CHAPTER XXIV

He turned contemptuously from the Mexican and spoke now to Morales. "We are a free people, and tonight there came among us many horsemen, mad with drink. They came with anger in their eyes when they should have brought friendship. They battered down my lodges, they stampeded my horses, they threatened my young men, and one of them I had to kill. I take no sorrow for that, but unless these bonds are taken from my hands, you, Paco Morales, will take great sorrow, for we Yaqui of the mountains are many and our young men have not forgotten other days. It might be forgotten to urge them to battle than to hold them back." He stopped speaking. Morales, without a word, walked up to the man and cut the bonds at his wrists. "My men will trouble you no more," he said slowly. "Go in peace."

Not until the moccasins of the Yaqui had shuffled out through the patio did anyone speak; then with a smile that still held a kind of sinister amusement Morales glanced at Jito. "One more loyal follower like you, Jito mio, and I shall be a ruined man. Once the Yaqui joins with this Coyote bandit, your vaqueros will have little time for merriment." A sudden tremor of anger seized him. "Take, for the love of God, your band forever out of my sight." He rose and bowed to Don Bob.

"Never," said the old Spaniard, "have guests of mine suffered such disturbance. You must forgive one who grows too old to remember the demands of hospitality. Now I am very tired. Good night, señors. As for you, Jito, come to my room a moment. There are a few things that must be said."

His gaunt shoulders seemed more bowed as he left the room. Jito followed after a surly nod at the two Americans.

For a time Don Bob smoked on in silence while Ted paced the length of the room.

"It's hideous," Ted exclaimed. "This cold contempt for life these vaqueros have. Morales himself cares nothing. I'm wondering why we continue to take his hand and eat his food."

"My dear fellow, what earthly good would it do to insult him now? Take my word, there are better and more subtle ways. That Yaqui, for instance, He gave me something to think about." And for a space of many minutes Don Bob smoked, his eyes fixed in thought. At last he shook his head.

"Morales must be worried. It is as if he, too, felt the breaking up of things. This kingdom of fear that he has built can't go on always. There are mutterings. That Yaqui bluffed his way to freedom. Morales didn't dare hold him. The peons themselves aren't taking things lying down as they once did. And behind all this is the shadow of El Coyote. No, I think Señor Morales has many things to think of this night. Thoughts that will be unwelcome bedfellows for the Spaniard."

But Ted was gazing out toward the desert, and a little smile was playing about his mouth. When he looked up it was obvious he hadn't heard a word of Don Bob's soliloquy, for he murmured: "You should have seen her. She was magnificent."

"My son," answered Don Bob sorrowfully, "when they reach your stage, hope, if any, lies in a good night's rest."

And slipping his arm through Ted's he led him up the stairs.

Twice in the night Ted awoke to hear rain pattering on the tile roof, but the sunrise was cloudless. Adela waited for him in the patio, and in her face lay no sign of the night's happening, but as they passed down the walk to where the horses stood she looked silently up toward the mesa. High up on its edge, touched with the sun's first rays, glittered the Cross of the Conquerors. Lips slightly parted, she gazed up in a kind of silent communion—then turned toward the man.

"The legend of the Cross may yet be answered," she said slowly, "and the peon find his liberator. I thought so for a moment last night."

She mounted and led the way down the long drive.

"The first morning of creation must have been like this," Ted told her, as they rode through the gate and out toward the desert. "Everything washed and dusted. Those mountains look as if they were only a few miles away."

"They're about thirty. We're going half-way to them, to the Spring of the Saints. There we'll try to eat all the food in our saddlebags and come back through the sunset. A whole day devoted to your lordship. I'm being very nice to you, Ted Radcliffe, for no reason at all."

"You're being quite perfect to me. I'm wondering if it isn't because you pity me for—what's happened," he said.

Leaning forward she fondled the soft ears of her horse.

"I've not felt the least twinge of pity. Why should I, when the future is all ahead of you and you have a mind and a body to do what you want? Besides, you have something I never had—the memory of a father. Mine died when I was too young to remember—I only know he was big and handsome and had a wild Latin temper. And I know he loved my mother very greatly. So don't give me credit for too much charity. These people of mine, they have need of all the charity I possess."

"I love the way you call them your people."

"They are my people. Don't forget my mother had Mexican blood in her veins as well as Irish. And she loved this country and these people just as I do. She taught me their legends and their songs. So I am a creature of this desert country."

After a long moment she added, "I wish I could make it a country of happiness instead of tears."

"You mean—"

"What you saw last night. That sort of thing. There is a curse of cruelty on the lords of this land. They love cruelty for its own sake. Even my uncle. With me and Jito he is the gentlest of men. I love him. But to him these people in their mean little homes are not people with blood and feelings or with hopes and dreams. They are just things that do his will."

"Jito certainly seems a little inclined that way."

"Oh, Jito is a child, mentally. My uncle is his god. Jito is cruel only as a child is cruel. Sometimes when I have him to myself I make him sorry. But deep inside he is proud to be the feared leader of my uncle's herdsmen."

At the top of a little knoll she stopped, and together they looked out through the fresh morning air and over the blue sagebrush to where far-off purple mountains cast long shadows across the world. A little breeze stirred the desert stillness with the sound of very distant waters, and in a kind of enchanted silence those two watched and listened, held by the beauty and peace of it. When at last the girl turned, great tears stood in her eyes.

She whispered, as if half afraid to break the spell: "How wonderful this all is, this beautiful country of mine. Life could be so perfect here. It could be always a land of song and eternal sunshine, a land where everyone might have his little piece of land, his home and his work to do. When I was away at school, like an alien out there in the world, I realized then how much I loved all this desert country of mine. Each night I would pray the Mother of God to show me how I might come back and change this land of slavery into the paradise it should really be. The freedom and hopefulness that in your country you have. And so easily we could have it. Only to change my uncle—that would be enough."

She laughed with little mirth. "I came back, I tried to change it all, but ever between me and all I wanted to do was his iron will. Each year he is more obsessed with the desire to be absolute law in everything."

She touched the horse with her spur. "But why cloud a perfect morning? I had resolved to put all this behind me today, and be gay. If I did not sometimes forget, I should go mad. So now you will tell me about your own country."

But Ted shook his head. "You already know about my country. Let's talk of you. You are serious-minded, aren't you? And yet you told me you've been in love."

"In love? Oh, many times." She laughed.

"I don't think I like the thought of your being in love many times."

"You wouldn't, Señor Ted. The big, conquering male never does. He wants always to think that the one woman he selects has been dutifully waiting for him through the years. But I am a woman with a past. Back when I was twelve years old I was madly in love with Jito because he could bring me gila monsters in his hands and carry snakes in his blouse, and I couldn't. And I've been long in love with an old priest. Even now I'm in love with him, grown up as I am. You shall see him some day. And I'm in love with still another man, even today."

"Who?"

"A man older than you. A man of the world."

"Who?"

"Don Bob. Isn't he a dear?"

There was a strange quality of relief in Ted's laugh. "I know one reason why you love him. Bob's as savage as you over the wrongs of the peon. I'd advise a combination between you and Don Bob and El Coyote. There's no telling what the three of you couldn't do."

"The three of us? You should say the four of us. Because we'd enlist your talents too. We would have you rub Jito's nose in the dust each morning before breakfast. And now watch that horse of yours, for we're going down into the stream bed, and it's a crazy, crumbling path from here on."

PAYNE'S LOYALTY GREAT AID TO WASHINGTON

Played Mighty Part in Shaping of Future of United States

CAME HERE IN YEAR 1774

As the country pays tribute to George Washington during this year, marking the 200th anniversary of his birth, the United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission reminds us that it is well to mark with some thought the anniversaries of other patriots without whose loyal help George Washington might never have been able to achieve what he did.

One of these is Thomas Paine, who was born on January 29, one hundred and ninety-five years ago. This remarkable man was the son of a Quaker who lived in Thetford, England, a stay-maker by trade. Like all sturdy English yeomen, the father expected his son to follow the family calling, but young Thomas soon tired of making stays and became an exciseman. After a turn at this, he tried teaching in London. But already he had shown evidences of an intelligence far out of the ordinary, and had gained the acquaintance of Benjamin Franklin, then living in England.

In 1774, Paine emigrated to America, bearing a letter of recommendation from Franklin, and soon obtained the editorship of The Pennsylvania Magazine, published in Philadelphia. Even then the American air was full of the spirit of independence, and Paine not merely swung into the movement but rapidly forged to a place of leadership. It appeared that his genius was waiting for just such an opportunity, and, using his magazine as a means of expression, Paine launched the first of those writings that soon inflamed the country with enthusiasm for freedom.

This was his "Common Sense," afterward issued in pamphlet form and circulated all over the Colonies. It blew away every distinction between king and commoner, boldly urged Americans to assert their own national sovereignty, and so stirred public opinion to the highest pitch.

In a publication of all Paine's writings and letters, the late Moncure D. Conway presents this remarkable writer as playing a mighty part in the shaping of the future United States. It is Conway's belief that Paine, by his clarion writings, laid the foundation for the Declaration of Independence and even some articles in the Constitution. We know that Washington was one of his eager readers, and that he deeply respected Paine for the tremendous influence this writer exerted in maintaining public morale during the darkest moments of the Revolution. Indeed Paine's famous broadside, beginning "These are the times that try men's souls," was written, it is said, on the head of a drum when Paine was a soldier under Washington's command and when the discouragements of the retreat across the Jerseys had dashed public support of the war to its lowest depths.

In the fall of 1776 Paine enlisted as a volunteer in the Continental Army and became aide-de-camp to General Greene. But military duties, far from stopping his pen, only gave him a more intimate insight with which to write, and during this period with the army Paine began that series of 16 pamphlets which he assembled under the general title of "The Crisis." These maintained his reputation as one of the leading influences of the Revolution.

But writing far from exhausted all of Paine's abilities. In 1777 he was made secretary of the newly-formed Committee of Foreign Affairs established by Congress. He served one year as clerk of the Pennsylvania Assembly.

In 1782 Washington got him a grant of $800 from Congress to continue his writings. In 1784 New York gave him a tract of 277 acres of land in New Rochelle; Pennsylvania gave him 500 pounds, and, in 1785, Congress awarded him $3,000 to keep him from want.

With independence won in America, Paine was next attracted to the struggle for liberty in France, and played a prominent part in the French Revolution, at one time being thrown into prison and narrowly escaping the guillotine, for arguing in behalf of the deposed king. He continued a prisoner until James Monroe, the new American minister to France, finally obtained his release. But during his months in prison, Paine lost favor with many of his former idolators by writing his much-misunderstood book, "The Age of Reason," and argument for deism which many took to be atheistic. This work long cast a shadow over an otherwise doughty patriot and lover of liberty. Now his fame is emerging from under this shadow, and his truly remarkable genius and achievements begin to shine for what they were: writer, philosopher, soldier and champion of liberty.

LINCOLN AS A YOUTH

The Lincoln of 23, the volunteer in the Blackhawk war, youthful and strong, with work unmarked by the cares of the nation, with face unmarked by sorrow, is this Lincoln—the work of Leonard Cronle.

Lincoln Forbears Not Men of Mean Stock

His Ancestor a Member of Jefferson's Cabinet.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN came of no mean stock, according to Dr. Louis A. Warren, of Fort Wayne, Ind., director of the Lincoln Historical Research foundation and editor of Lincoln Lore.

The Civil war President's family belonged to the ante-bellum southern aristocracy of Kentucky, and one of his ancestors was a cabinet officer in a Democratic administration, Doctor Warren's research has revealed.

In refuting the popular misconception that Lincoln rose from poverty and was of an humble origin, Doctor Warren declared that if his revelations were a shock to cherished ideas of the emancipator, they had the sound backing of documentary evidence.

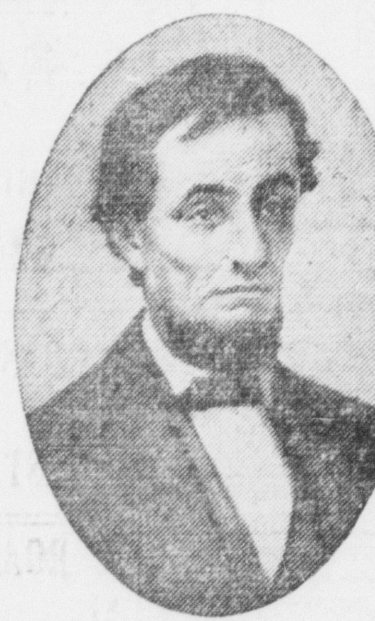

"President Lincoln was of the seventh generation of his family in America, and his line has been traced back through four generations in Hingham, England. Samuel Lincoln, who came to America in 1637 and founded the town of Hingham, Mass., was the founder of the American line.

"When Lincoln visited Worcester, Mass., in 1848, and was entertained by Levi Lincoln, he was the guest of one of his own family, although neither he nor his host knew of the connection. The President died without knowing of the link with the Lincolns who had a prominent part in molding the history of New England. A recent document lists more than 1,000 of them. Levi, Sr., who was once governor of the Bay state, was secretary of state under Thomas Jefferson."

Doctor Warren traced the migration of the Lincolns from Massachusetts, through New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Kentucky, across the Ohio river into Indiana and thence to Illinois.

"Lincoln's grandfather, once holder of 5,000 acres of land in Kentucky, was massacred by the Indians in one of the great tragedies of the family. Following his death, when Lincoln's father, Thomas, was ten years old, the widow was defrauded out of practically all of the land, which may explain the beginnings of the humble origin theory."

LINCOLN IN OIL

Here is a recently discovered original oil painting of Mr. Lincoln which, with other relics of the martyred President have been acquired for the University museum.

Sought Supreme Wisdom
Abraham Lincoln said: "I have been driven many times to my knees by the overwhelming conviction that I had nowhere else to go. My own wisdom and that of all about me seemed insufficient for that day."

Last Witness of Tragedy
Henry C. Harris, ninety-year-old Union veteran of the Civil war and believed to have been the last surviving witness of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, died at his home at Berryville, Ark., in 1930.

A PROPHECY

(From "Lincoln's Grave")

Old soldiers true, ah, them all men can trust,
Who fought, with conscience clear, on either side;

Who bearded death and thought their cause was just;

Their stainless honor can not be denied;
Ring it and sing it up and down the land,
And let no voice dare answer it with sneer,
Or shut its meaning out.

Ring it and sing it, we go hand in hand,
Old infantry, old cavalry, old cannons.

And if Virginia's vales shall ring again
To battle-yell of Mosby or Mahone,
If Wilkes' wild brigade or Morgan's men
Once more wheel into lines; or all alone
A Sheridan shall ride, a Cleburne fall—
There will not be two flags above them flying,
But both in one, welded in that pure flame
Uplifting in us all.

When kindred unto kindred, loudly crying,
Rally and cheer in freedom's holy name!

—Maurice Thompson.

Lincoln Wrote His Own Autobiography

Document in Possession of Milwaukee Family.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S autobiography, consisting of slightly more than 500 words in his own handwriting, is in the possession of Mrs. Harriet F. Richardson and her son, of Milwaukee, Wis.

They were willed the document by the late Miss Fannie Fell.

Jesse Fell, Miss Fell's father, shared law offices with Lincoln in Springfield, Ill. He prevailed upon Lincoln to write the autobiography in 1859 when it became apparent that the great emancipator would become a Presidential candidate.

Extracts from the autobiography follow:

"I was born February 12, 1809, in Hardin county, Kentucky. My parents were both born in Virginia of undistinguished families, second families, I should say. My mother, who died in my tenth year, was of a family of the name of Hanks, some of whom now reside in Adams, and others in Macon county, Illinois.

"My paternal grandfather, Abraham Lincoln, emigrated from Rockingham county, Virginia, to Kentucky about 1781 or 1782, where a year or two later he was killed by Indians, not in battle, but by stealth, when he was laboring to open a farm in the forest.

"His ancestors, who were Quakers, went to Virginia from Berks county, Pennsylvania. An effort to identify them with the New England family of the same name, ended in nothing more definite than a similarity of Christian names of both families, such as Enoch, Levi, Mordecai, Solomon, Abraham and the like.

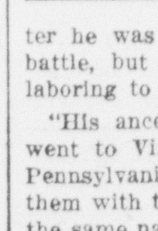

"My father, at the death of his father, was but six years of age and he grew up literally without education. He removed from Kentucky to what is now Spencer county, Indiana, in my eighth year.

"At twenty-one I came to Illinois and passed the first year in Illinois—Macon county. Then I got to New Salem, where I remained a year as a sort of clerk in the store. Then came the Black Hawk war and I was elected a captain of volunteers, a success which gave me more pleasure than any I have had since. I went into the campaign, was elected, ran for the legislature the same year (1832) and was beaten. Only time I have ever been beaten by the people. The next three succeeding biennial elections I was elected to the legislature.

"During this legislative period I had studied law and removed to Springfield to practice it. In 1841 I was elected to the lower house of congress. From 1849 to 1854 I practiced law more assiduously than ever before—always a Whig in politics, and generally on the Whig electoral tickets, making active canvasses.

"If any personal description of me is thought desirable, it may be said, I am 6 feet 4 inches in height, lean in flesh, weighing on an average 180 pounds; dark complexion, with coarse hair and gray eyes—no marks or brands recollected."

Night and artificial light add to the beauty of Lincoln's monument, located in Lincoln park, Chicago.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE— WITHOUT CALOMEL And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If you feel sour and mink and the world looks pink, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine. For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas builds up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul, skin often breaks out in blemishes. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned. It takes those good, old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely. But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Recent substitute, 25c at all stores. © 1931 C. M. Co.

COTTON BEING USED IN ALL MANNER OF FROCKS FOR SPRING

Linens, Chintz, Organdies, To Be in Use; Cotton Beach Aprons Seen

By Alice Langelier
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

PARIS.—Cotton will decidedly come out of the kitchen this spring and walk straight into the parlor, inasmuch as all the smart dressmakers are using it for any number of their lovely creations.

They are showing all manner of rough, lightweight and handkerchief linens, including a new pique and chintz, the former very smart for collars and cuffs as well as vests and whole fronts and undershirts to be worn with the redingote coat which seems to be a popular spring item.

Yvet is showing a cool-looking dark blue silk organdie which comes in the cotton class, with ruffles on the skirt. Vera Borea who is making cotton her king this season, uses it for beach wear, featuring "beach aprons." One in languistine quilted pique is very smart and will undoubtedly be seen at Cannes and Biarritz this summer. Pyjama suits are also of cotton jerseys and tricots. Bathing suits, too, have abandoned wool for cotton.

A greige linen suit has a smart pleated and fringed band set across the back, flapping loosely for a few inches over the shoulders like epaulettes.

Checked gingham blouses are a cotton feature of another house, worn with light wool skirts. Printed cotton frocks often have bib fronts with Eton collars and little puffed sleeves. A frock of black cotton pique has up-standing pieces of red and white at the neck and the same facings on the sleeves.

WAS IN ATLANTIC CITY

William G. Buckman, 933 Radcliffe street, spent the week-end in Atlantic City, N. J., where he was registered at Haddon Hall.

Vernal Ensemble

This natty tweed suit in black and blue is ideal for sports or street wear. It has a black leather belt and a scarf of powder blue. A black rough-straw hat, with velvet twist and bow over the right eye, lends a piquant touch to the ensemble.

"What!...for only

$180 ? I CAN'T BELIEVE IT!"

When you look at the Moraine you won't think of it as being low-priced. Its gleaming, lustrous, all-white cabinet is particularly beautiful. Its streamlined legs and the flat, usable top will please you.

Then open the door. An interior of seamless, white porcelain! And the Moraine is specially designed to occupy but little floor space and yet provide room for large quantities of food.

GOOD SHOTS FROM FOUL
LINE HELP RAMBLERS

(By T. M. Jono)

Good marksmanship from the foul line enabled the Bristol Ramblers to score a 27-23 victory over the Columbians of the A. O. H. League last night on the Hibernian floor. In the preliminary game, the A. O. H. Cubs defeated the Third Ward five, 38-25.

The Ramblers in their victory over the A. O. H. team scored thirteen times from the foul mark and this represented their margin of victory. The losers outscored the winners from the foul with eight field goals to seven. The Columbians scored six times from the fifteen-foot mark.

The game was nip and tuck from beginning to end and at the end of the third quarter the count stood at nineteen all. E. Spadacino was fouled and scored the shot, giving the Ramblers a 29-19 edge. "Huby" Brady put the Columbians into the lead with a two-point shot under the basket. E. Spadacino put the ultimate winners into the lead again by sinking in two foul shots, making the score 22-21. "Mike" Mulligan then tallied a long two-point shot which again gave the Columbians the lead, the score being 23-22.

With one and one-half minutes remaining to be played, J. Spadacino scored a foul shot and then Alta and Tulio put the tray on ice by hitting the cords for a double-decker each.

"Huby" Brady was the star of the losers, playing a fine guarding game as well as scoring eight points. M. Mulligan also played well. For the winners, Alta and E. Spadacino excelled.

"Joey" Roe led the A. O. H. Cubs to victory in the first game of the night. "Joey" hit the cords for nine double-deckers, eighteen points, to score almost one-half of his team's points. Several of the shots were made from difficult angles of the court. Highest starred for the losers.

Japan has become a world power without Manchuria. Japan has imported all her raw materials from Europe, America and Asia. The Japanese, with the aid of foreign raw materials, have shown themselves to be an industrious and progressive nation. If a state of war should arise between Japan and one of the countries on which her welfare is dependent, Japan would be at a disadvantage. But with Manchuria, from which to draw on for resources, Japan is on the level with and perhaps slightly above any country that desires to take the offensive against the Japanese nation.

Japan has shown her contempt for the world, as to the inquiries certain nations have taken in order to sound out Japanese aims in Manchuria. Her contempt for an explanation, several in fact, of her actions in Manchuria, from the American Secretary of State, has been astounding. Japan's explanations to America have amounted to a "Keep your hands off, this is my business" character.

Since Japan has taken such a disrespectful attitude towards the United States' inquiries in the Manchurian question, Japan must be certain of her position in the Orient and the Pacific Ocean.

The United States should, but with not too much force, try to get China and Japan to reach an agreement over the Manchurian question. Also the United States should demand the right of the "open-door policy" and free trade in Manchuria. This should be so since Manchuria is being conquered without any reason, except the greed of Japan. America has a great interest in Manchuria because Japan has ready access to the Philippines and the Hawaiian Islands. Also Japan's conquest of Manchuria and her attitude toward the United States must sooner or later interfere with American interests in the Orient and America's supremacy in the Pacific Ocean.

"Winter" Diseases in Yardley
Section Have Low Total

YARDLEY, Feb. 11.—The report of the Yardley-Makefield Community Nurse for the month of January includes the following: Few cases of acute illness have appeared during the month, even less perhaps than the normal number of characteristic "winter diseases"; scarlet fever situation remains practically unchanged.

There seems to be an increasing realization of the importance of having physical defects in children corrected promptly. This is offset to a degree by the fact that in many cases there is financial difficulty in securing the needed treatment. Most of the cases of malnutrition among children seem to be due to unbalanced food, and other causes, rather than to insufficient food. There seems to be a few cases, however, in which there is an absolute lack of sufficient food. The summary of the nursing visits is as follows: Prenatal maternity cases, 2; child health—infants, 17; visits; pre-school, 96; school age, 132; or a total of 296 visits. Visits to schools, 25; health centers, 2; hospitals and clinics, 2; total, 325. Medical inspection at child health centers: Yardley, 9; Edgewood, 15; total, 24.

School work, visits to school, 25; room inspections, 52; individual inspections, 141; first aid, 39; conferences with teachers, 40; excluded for medical inspection, 2; communicable diseases, 13; as contacts, 20; corrections, dental, 5; malnutrition, 8; vision, 1; cervical glands, 2; total, 16 corrections.

Communicable diseases: school children—scarlet fever, 2; chicken pox, 9; whooping cough, 2. Preschool children and adults—scarlet fever, 2; chicken pox, 2.

Chinese Courageously
Resisting Japanese

range was so close that I wouldn't be surprised if the steel splinters had flown back, striking the very ship that fired the shell.

Eight, twelve, sixteen—they were slammed in hot as the destroyer steamed slowly upstream, but the surprise of all surprises came to me when I realized that between each thundering salvo the machine-guns of the village water-front defenses pecked back at the ship like hordes of hungry woodpeckers, while bullets rattled against the steel plates and armor screens with a sound like a load of gravel being dumped on a tin roof.

That's why I opened this broadcast with a word of admiration for those Chinese machine-gunners. It's the first time in my experiences in war that I have seen men receive a heavy cannon fire at close range and stick to their posts and answer it with machine guns.

Of course this fighting is one-sided, with all the advantages in armament on the Japanese side, but there is nobody engaged in this conflict who has given an exhibition of higher courage than these Chinese defenders of Woosung village.

For the past few days the impact has been something like the meeting of an irresistible force and an immovable object, with resultant high losses to both the forces and the object.

For three hours I watched this continual procession of destroyers blasting away at the Chinese shore works, and then I tried to make a further run downstream to the mouth of the Yangtze.

At intervals during the day the duel between warships and land forces had been called off, apparently by mutual consent to permit the passage of neutral shipping up and down this international waterway, because, of course, we must always remember that no war has been declared by either side, so things must go on as though it were peace.

Taking advantage of one of these lulls I started downstream in the hope I could reach the mouth of the Yangtze and observe the destroyed fort.

No luck. I had gauged the time wrong. We had passed the entire length of the Chinese defenses, standing off 200 yards in the direction of the opposite shore and not a shot was fired in our direction when, into full view steaming upstream, there came another Japanese destroyer firing at the shore with her forward guns as she came.

I signalled to the Chinese boys to turn about and speed upstream. We did, and just in time to get out of the withering line of fire of machine-gun bullets with which the Chinese shore defenses greeted the Japanese destroyer, whose course lay between us and that shore.

Once more we heard that leaden rattle of bullets against the steel sides of the destroyer as we realized what a small chance the frail wooden shell of our craft would have had against such a blast.

Joe, the Chinese boy piloting, turned a full-face grateful grin in my direction as we reached the zone of safety.

"Joe," I asked, "what for warship all time go boom boom against Woosung people?"

With a shrug of his shoulders and Oriental resignation Joe replied:

"Maybe some Japan man want sell goods Chinaman. Chinaman no buy. Japan man go boom boom."

Hornsby In a Tight Spot

By HARDIN BURNLEY

© 1932 King Features Syndicate, Inc. Great Britain rights reserved.

ROGERS HORNSBY'S Chicago Cubs may have a better chance than a lot of other clubs to bag the 1932 hunting in the senior loop, but it is generally conceded among baseball men that Hornsby himself, with his $40,000 salary, is sitting on a keg of dynamite.

The late William Wrigley, Jr., fired Joe McCarthy in the waning days of the 1930 season simply because McCarthy had failed to deliver a pennant that year.

William Wrigley's son may fire Rogers Hornsby in the fall of 1932 if Hornsby does not produce the goods. There is every indication that the once inimitable second sacker is fully aware of this.

Last year at this time, the Rajah had a roster of seasoned veterans, some of them capable clouters, some of them finished fielders. It was practically the same colorful outfit which had run roughshod over the rest of the league during 1929. There was Hartnett, Grimm, Hornsby, English, Bell, Stephenson, Wilson and Cuyler. There was Malone, there was Root, there was Bush. Under McCarthy this aggregation had kept the turnstiles busy. With the lively ball, they were potential champions beyond a doubt, even though there was some doubt about Bell's arm, about Hornsby's heel, and about the speed left in the aging limbs of Hartnett, Stephenson and Grimm.

And what happened?

Hack Wilson, who in 1930 had led both leagues in home runs and driven in more runs than anyone had ever driven in before, proceeded to fall down on the job completely. The home runs no longer careened from his war club. Malone, the big pitcher, fell off in effectiveness, and joined Wilson in a dislike for Hornsby. Stephenson joined the bench warmers. Hartnett had to be shelved for a faster man. Grimm had one of the best seasons in his career. Kiki Cuyler, a storm centre in some previous years, seemed to click with the Rajah, and turned in a succession of sterling performances. But the Cubs, at the end of the 1931 season, were farther from a pennant than they were under McCarthy in 1930, and the fans, while blaming Wilson's failure chiefly, began to take it out on Hornsby.

Now Wilson has gone to Brooklyn by way of St. Louis. He may be all through as a baseball headliner. If he makes good, however, the call of the razberry will plague Hornsby's ears in Wrigley Field in the 1932 campaign.

Hornsby's only defense will be a pennant winner, built around Grimes, Root, Bush, Malone, Cuyler, Barton, English, and the rookies Herman, Hack and Taylor. If with this assortment he can pick a championship out of John Heydler's hat he will not only be forgiven for his brush with Wilson, but will be hailed as a miracle man. From the looks of things he'll have to be.
